o&i consulting ltd launches

Paul Bloch, Director, announced the launch of o&i consulting ltd, a new company with deep experience in creating efficient operations.

Paul said “o&i consulting’s core skills are hidden in the company name: the ‘O’ for Operational research and the ‘I’ for Industrial engineering. These skills drive the operations improvement, design and planning services that we will provide to the aviation and distribution industries.”

The o&i consulting team members are Paul Bloch, David Calder, Neville Coss, Chad Hsu, Claire Morgan, John Packham and Fiona Rees; each have a reputation within aviation and distribution for creating efficient operations. Their achievements include reducing costs for major express parcel companies; increasing throughput at airport baggage and passenger security facilities; mapping, designing and optimising airline check-in and ramp processes; and designing logistics operations for the Olympic Games.

David Calder, Director stated that “Together with a group of former colleagues we are establishing a new business in which we will each be shareholders. This new business will have expertise in operational research, industrial engineering, aviation and logistics. Now is not necessarily the best time to establish a company, however, we are confident in our ability and in the importance of the work we do, so we are now delighted to formally open for business.”
